June Commentary

Your Fund returned +6.4% during the month compared to +4.4% for the MSCI World Index NR (£).

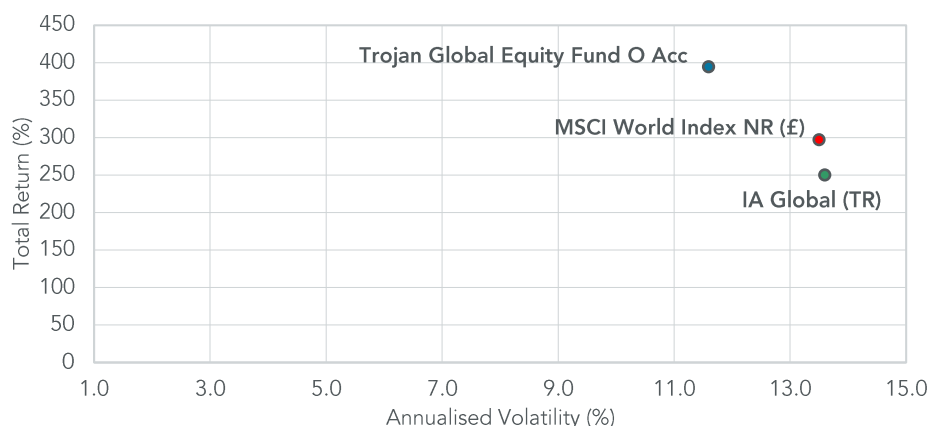

A meeting with Microsoft in June reaffirmed to us why, despite a clear renaissance, the company's prospects remain bright and, in our view, underappreciated. This perspective is informed by an understanding of how the structural shift towards cloud computing continues to improve the company's opportunities for growth. Firstly, the migration of existing workloads from on-premise to public cloud platforms, including Microsoft's Azure, remains immature. Around a quarter of all enterprise software is consumed in the cloud, and this falls to just ~10% for more compute-intensive data and analytics workloads. With over $30bn in estimated annual revenues, growing +46% in the latest quarter, Azure's rapid adoption suggests a vast addressable market, running well into the trillions of dollars. Secondly, the cloud is creating opportunities that did not exist to the same extent in an on-premise world. For instance, the proliferation in the type and severity of online threats has powered the annual sales of Microsoft's security products and services to exceed $10bn, with growth of over +40%. Finally, Microsoft's unrivalled breadth allows for unique integration of its cloud-based products and services, covering everything from productivity apps, infrastructure services, security and communications. For example, the daily engagement of over 145m users of Teams strengthens the utility of Microsoft's core Office suite, allowing Microsoft to take greater market share as IT budgets grow.

Microsoft's stock is no longer the bargain it was when Troy first became an investor over a decade ago. However, a current cash flow yield of a little below 3% can combine with annual growth of cash flow per share in the teens to deliver attractive double-digit prospective annualised shareholder returns.
