

Trojan Ethical Fund

All data as at 31 January 2022

www.taml.co.uk

The investment objective of the Trojan Ethical Fund is to provide capital growth (net of fees), ahead of inflation (UK Retail Price Index), over the longer term (5 to 7 years). Its investment policy is to invest across a broad range of asset classes. Whilst asset allocation will vary, in general, the investment universe will comprise high-quality, developed market equities, developed market government bonds, gold related investments, cash and money market instruments (such as treasury bills). The portfolio will be constructed with input from both top-down analysis (looking at an economy as a whole) and bottom-up analysis (study of individual securities). The Fund will invest in accordance with the parameters of its Ethical Exclusion Criteria.

January Commentary

Your Fund returned -2.1% during the month compared to -0.3% for the FTSE All-Share Index (TR).

The US stock market experienced its worst start to the year since 2009, with the S&P 500 finishing January down -5.3%. In the UK market, more highly-rated equities fell sharply (as reflected in the FTSE 250's price decline of -6.6%), offset by sectors such as energy and financials. The de-rating has been most pronounced for a number of US technology stocks, with the tech-focused Nasdaq falling -9% in the month. Single share price moves have been particularly dramatic with the likes of Netflix or Facebook plunging more than -25% in a day.

These are not the markers of a rational, well-functioning market. Myriad forces are at play but the proximate cause of share price falls is the fear of higher inflation feeding into tighter monetary policy. December's US Consumer Price Index (CPI) print of 7% was the highest since June 1982 and bond markets responded in kind, pricing in five interest rate hikes this year. Several factors, most notably energy and goods prices, are driving up inflation. Much of this is pandemic-driven but the longer that consumers and businesses have to get used to higher prices, the more likely inflation is to become embedded. As wages move to reflect a higher cost of living, this has the potential to feed back into demand and create a wage-price spiral. What happens over the coming months will be important in determining longer-lasting mentalities.

But this moment in markets cannot be viewed in isolation or through a single lens. Notwithstanding Covid, the S&P 500 has been on an upward tear since March 2009. If you had taken a 6-month sabbatical in February 2020, you would not have noticed any aberration. The UK market has had a bumpier ride, but this is distorted by exposure to more cyclical and structurally challenged sectors. For most developed market equities with good long-term prospects, valuations have experienced a fair wind for many years. Now that interest rates and central bank liquidity threaten to reverse course, share prices are at risk.

It is for this reason that we remain conservative in our asset allocation, and selective in the stocks we own. Companies such as Alphabet do not trade on lofty multiples. They also have strong, structural tailwinds as evidenced by the company's Q4 profit growth of +40%. Whilst share prices such as Alphabet's may yet get caught in the cross-fire, we remain confident that the valuation considerably understates the long-term potential. At the same time, there are many businesses we would like to own but which remain expensive, notwithstanding the recent correction.

The conditions are ripe for volatility to persist. The Fund should fall considerably less than equity markets, but it will not be immune. Longer-term we are still confident that real interest rates can only rise so much. Short-term, sentiment and irrationality can reign supreme, especially when valuations have climbed so high. Our equity exposure and index-linked duration remain modest and our cash weighting has grown. We are well placed to take the other side of the trade when more excellent businesses start to trade on reasonable valuations.
