June Commentary

June saw the gold price rise from $1,305 to over $1,400. This move has taken the precious metal back to levels not seen since 2013. When viewed in sterling terms, the gold price is now a whisker away from its all-time high.

Until recently, sentiment towards gold had ground lower since 2013 as expectations for higher interest rates, particularly in the US, weighed on a non-yielding asset. However, this has reversed over the past nine months. Today, c. $13trn of the world's debt is now offering a negative yield-to-maturity. Suddenly gold's 'yield credentials' are less of a sticking point for investors.

As quantitative tightening ambitions fade and talk of currency wars dominate the headlines, gold's status as a currency which central bankers cannot print is increasingly valuable. Alan Greenspan noted that, "If the dollar or any other currency would be universally accepted at all times, central banks would see no necessity to hold gold at all. The fact that they do so, shows that such currencies are not a universal replacement for gold."

Gold continues to provide a vital hedge against monetary instability, whilst offering valuable diversification in times of equity market stress. In the Trojan Ethical Fund, we own gold via physically-backed ETFs. These are subject to a twice-yearly audit, which is able to identify the bars sourced prior to 1 January 2012, the date after which it became obligatory for the gold to be sourced in compliance with the London Bullion Market Association's Responsible Gold Guidance. The guidance was set up to combat systematic or widespread abuses of human rights, to avoid contributing to conflict, to comply with high standards of anti-money laundering and to combat terrorist financing practices. The Fund has an objective of minimising exposure to gold sourced prior to 2012.
