December Commentary

Your Fund returned +0.5% during the month compared to +1.8% for the MSCI World Index (NR) GBP.

We have initiated an investment in Fastenal, funded by the sale of Emerson Electric. The decision to terminate an investment is not one we take lightly and is triggered in one of three ways. First, we may sell if an investment has become too highly valued. A very long-term investment horizon requires us to be content to withstand periods of full valuation, if not clear overvaluation, so this is rare. Second, we will sell if we simply get it wrong. We seek to minimise mistakes by being highly selective about the companies in which we invest and ensure a high-quality operating business that elicits both low cyclicality and capital intensity. Errors in business selection or analysis do happen occasionally and we are quick to learn and move on if such an event occurs. Finally, and most happily, we will sell if we find a better idea, as is the case here.

Fastenal is a distributor of industrial products in the US (originally nut and bolts or fasteners as they are known in the US). Benefitting from economies of both scale (driving low cost) and scope (having a broad range of products) leads to consistent and defendable, unlevered, high returns on capital employed. The scale and density of the distribution and logistics network, built up over decades, allows the company to layer on further products (including recently PPE for COVID) which would be uneconomic for others to build from scratch. By integrating into customers' workflow with vending machines and onsite locations, Fastenal is upgrading its position in the value chain from distributor to supply chain partner.

A large total addressable market and a still-fragmented industry leaves plenty of room for organic growth to drive predictable free cash flow growth, funding an attractive income stream. In Fastenal, we find a superior business offering faster income growth, less debt, a longer runway for growth, better capital allocation and a highly regarded management team with a similar yield relative to Emerson. It wins the competition for capital within the portfolio on that basis.

We thank our investors for their continued support in a challenging year for all.
