May Commentary

The Fund produced a return of +0.4% during the month compared to a return of +1.1% for the FTSE All-Share Index (TR).

High quality UK-listed income companies such as Croda, Experian, Reckitt Benckiser and InterContinental Hotels Group make up the core of your portfolio. However, the mandate's flexibility means we are able to make select overseas investments where our global research process identifies exceptional investment opportunities in other equity markets. At the month end, non-UK stocks accounted for c. 15% of portfolio assets. Such investments are made not as a reflection of any geographic asset allocation process but rather on a stock-by-stock basis in order to add diversification to the portfolio, to access business models not represented in the UK market or simply when we find great opportunities.

CME, or the Chicago Mercantile Exchange as it was originally, is one such example. CME owns and operates the leading futures exchange in the world, with a dominant position in exchange-traded interest rate, FX, energy, and metal derivative contracts. Improving economic activity, the potential for increased interest rate volatility, and a structural trend towards exchange-traded derivative contracts all support trading volume. With very high margins on incremental revenues, increasing volumes is the key driver of profit growth for CME. Further opportunities for growth stem from the 2018 acquisition of NEX Group, and their investment in the attractive S&P Index business.

Importantly, the company's enviable scale (it owns the world's five most liquid futures contracts) and capital-light business model mean CME requires minimal additional capital to sustain its growth, giving rise to an abundance of genuinely excess cash flow. This tends to be returned to investors in the form of a growing and sustainable ordinary dividend, augmented by regular special dividends.

As well as being a worthy income growth stock, CME's volumes have historically been positively correlated with interest rate and equity market volatility. This means an investment in CME brings differentiation and diversification to the portfolio, further justifying its place amongst our select group of overseas holdings.
